Translation of Namárië

Ah! golden fall the wind-blown leaves, The long years countless as trees' wings! Long years have passed by like swift draughts Of sweet mead in the lofty halls Beyond the West, 'neath Varda's vaults, Within whose blue tremble the stars In her song's holy, queenly voice; Who now shall fill the cup for me? For Kindler, Varda, Star-Queen, lifts Cloud-like hands from Mount Everwhite Drowning in shadow deep all paths, And darkness from a grey land lies On the foaming waves between us, And mist hides Calaciryo's gems. Lost to the East is Valimar! Farewell! Maybe thou, even thou Shalt find Valimar! Fare thee well!

Reuben Thomas

First four lines probably 1st July 1992, modified 8th December 2004; the rest 4th June 2009, for reading party on 12th June 2009.